

Desktop Organizers

Contributed by Peter Fuller
Wednesday, 30 August 2006

Nothing will improve your productivity more than organizing your desktop. I know that it may sound kind of strange, but it is really true. I have been using desktop organizers for years, and they have made a bigger difference in my life than you could possibly imagine. Getting a good desktop organizer will give you a place to put everything. Your pencils, your pens, your urgent notes and invoices, your office tools such as staplers, and even other things that do not fit neatly into any of these categories, will all find their proper place within your desktop organizer, and that is a fact.

And, even if you are quite particular about the way your desktop looks, that need be no obstacle to selecting a desktop organizer. Desktop organizers come in all sorts of different styles, from classic to modern. Some of them are quirky, clunky, and made of solid, craftsman-like wood, while others are made of metal mesh shaped into slick, low-profile drawers. No matter what look you are searching for, there will probably be dozens of desktop organizers, if not hundreds, to chose from which fit that look to a t. And many furniture and office shops will help you chose which of their desktop organizers is right for you. They will put them out on display on their different desks, with real sample office gear organized in them, so you can compare the different desktop organizers and imagine which looks best in each type of office. There is really no way to lose when you go to pick out your desktop organizer in person. Even if you are someone like me who has trouble making up your mind about what looks better and what, not as good, the helpful staff will no doubt help you chose from among all of their desktop organizers to find the perfect one for you.

The best thing about desktop organizers is that they give you a place to put everything. As a notoriously disorganized person, I can not tell you what a help this fact has been to me. Before I got into desktop organizers, my possessions were always scattered all over my office workspace, with nothing in its right location, but now everything is different. My productivity has improved many times over, because I always know where everything is. That is because, with my desktop organizer, everything is right where it is supposed to be.